Sunday, September 29, 2019 National Museum of African American History and Culture

As a panoramic view of black history and of living culture, the museum is a 400,000 square foot shift in collective memory and national self-knowledge because it tells you that the place is about both history and the present. What black people have done and also do. President Obama said "a story of suffering and delight; fear but also hope; of wandering in the wilderness and then seeing out onto the horizon a glimmer of the Promised Land". The museum reaches for completeness. FYI - It has taken me three years to get AAUW members and our travel friends into this amazing and unique place. Please join me.
